Elizabeth Kreutz
Canon sports photojournalist since 2001

Elizabeth Kreutz was covering one of the world's most important cycling events from the back of a motorcycle when rainy conditions caused her driver to crash. Everyone was okay, but Liz's Canon EF 70-200mm lens wasn't. She immediately reached out to her CPS rep and he arranged to have a Canon pro rep hand deliver her a replacement lens the next day, saving the rest of her shoot. This is the kind of support that Liz and thousands of professional photographers rely on and expect from Canon service, support and education.

President's Message

Hello and welcome to the 2014 edition of Just One More. This book represents the cream of the crop in Los Angeles area photojournalism. After you have perused the winning photographs and videos, I ask that you take a moment to review the list of PPAGLA Board members. These are the volunteers who are not only responsible for this book and the yearly banquet but the same ones who meet with law enforcement and court representatives to improve working conditions for you. They promote your organization to students with critiques and portfolio reviews and they will even grill you up a burger. So next time you are on assignment and cross paths with one of these board members....tell them 'thanks' for their help. Ask he or she what YOU can do to help. After all, the PPAGLA is YOUR organization. You are what makes it great.

It is my hope that you find inspiration in the images and videos in this book. Inspiration that drives you to work harder. To be more creative. To see things from a different angle and find motivation in the day-to-day routine. But mostly, to just make great pictures and videos. And of course, to enter those great pictures and videos in the contest next year! Get busy.

Your President,

Paul Buck

Severe drought conditions are evident as hundreds of house boats are dwarfed by steep banks that show the water level down 160 feet from the high water mark at Bidwell Canyon Marina on Lake Oroville on June 21. Receding water levels are revealing pre-historic and historic artifacts such as bedrock mortars and projectile points made by the Maidu people and remnants of placer and dredge mining that thrived here after John Bidwell discovered gold in 1848. Officials say Lake Oroville has only 43 percent of capacity and is likely to get worse, but is not as bad as the drought of 1976-77.

A dead fish lies in rocks and algae along the low banks of Lake Hemet on June 3. Lake Hemet, part of the San Bernardino National Forest, is a water storage reservoir in the San Jacinto Mountains of Riverside County. It is owned and operated by the Lake Hemet Municipal Water District.

Ruts show the path where water receded and dried up on the dry, cracked lakebed due to extreme drought conditions at Lake San Antonio, seated in Monterey County, which is about 4 percent of capacity. The 16-mile lake now reaches under 5 miles.

Assistant Trainer Alan Sherman has his hat nibbled by California Chrome at the Sherman barn shortly after a morning gallop in April. Sherman began his career as a jockey, later moving to trainer. “Ever since I can remember, I dreamed of winning the Kentucky Derby. But to go into it with the favorite and then actually win it has been amazing. I think the industry could really use a Triple Crown winner right now, especially with a story like this,” Sherman said. “This horse didn’t cost a ton of money to buy him or breed him. This goes to show you never know what can happen in this game.” Said his father Art, “I give a lot of credit to my son Alan. He’s my backbone. He watches the horse all the time.”

Lifetime Achievement

Rick Meyer

Rick comes from a long line of itinerant photographers. His birth parents are rumored to be Dorothea Lange and Victor Hasselblad. Rick knew that he was a natural for a photojournalism career when he processed his first roll of black and white film in hypo. After this initial setback, Rick developed a sure fire method for success. Fail and then succeed. His first gig was shooting football games for the Glendale News Press and Burbank Leader. What's not to love about getting paid $5 per picture?

Due to economic hardship or maybe the fact that Pepperdine University required you to attend chapel twice a week, Rick completed his Journalism BA degree in just 3.5 years.

A self-diagnosed "early bloomer," Rick's motto was "start at the top and work your way down." At the tender age of 23, he landed his first full-time job as a staff photographer at the Los Angeles Times where he covered local as well as international assignments. His exact start date was lost when The Times was bombed in 1910.

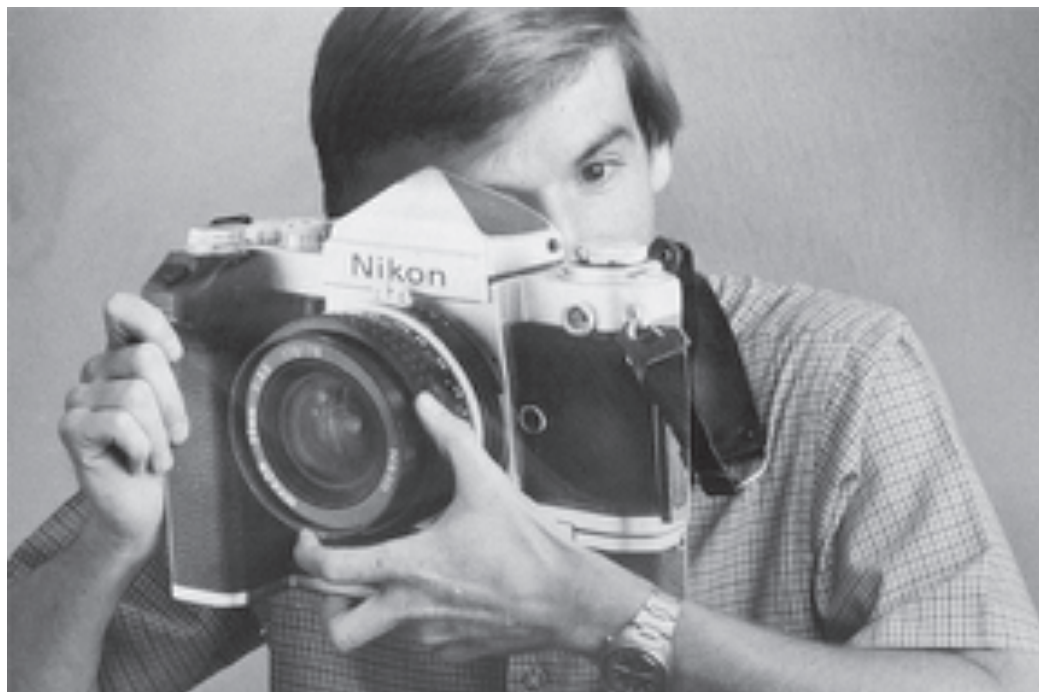

He joined the PPGALA in 1975 and was promptly made Treasurer and later served as President in 1992 and 1993. For the past 20 years he coordinated the Student Photojournalist of the Year contest and served as Membership Chairperson. His PPAGLA favorite saying is "You know who you are, now pay your dues!"

Continuing his "early bloomer" routine, Rick retired from The Times at age 50. For the next seven years he taught four photojournalism classes at the other institution of higher learning, USC.

Often described as one of the 100,000 richest people in Burbank, a city of 100,000, Rick took all his LA Times experiences and made a living shooting photographs for rich people who want "glamour" photos of their shopping malls. Rick says his experience with The White House pool, OJ Simpson trial, election campaigns, earthquakes and riots really pays off when you have to shoot a building.

Rick, having never heard of Rich Dad Poor Dad sure-fire financial success seminars, wasted a small fortune getting an MBA.

No matter how crazy, outlandish, or stupid the request from an assignment editor, photo editor or graphics person, Rick's polite response was always the same, "No problem, I'll be there in ten minutes." Even if the assignment was in Rialto at rush hour. He is also credited with coining the phrase "When news breaks, I fix it."

Rick enjoys running into former L.A. Times editors at the car wash or golf course where he enjoys making pleasantries. Then tells them that they missed a spot on his bumper or they get back on their mower and ride away.

A practical joker, Rick always chuckles at the irony of having Parkinson's Disease and being a still photographer.

What's not to love about photojournalism? No other profession allows you to head to the front of any police or buffet line.

Fred Prouser

Fred Prouser was born in Greenville, Mississippi. His first camera was an instamatic that his mother gave him when he was 19. He began his photographic career in Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, shooting for his college newspaper and later the Harrisburg Independent Press.

While in Harrisburg, Fred was hired as a stringer photographer by United Press International and the Associated Press. He married Rose in 1976, and the two began Prouser Photographic. They moved to Los Angeles in 1992, just in time to cover the Rodney King beating trial as a freelancer for Reuters.

Rose had perused a career in nursing after moving to Los Angeles, however would later return to her love of photography. Fred worked consistently for Reuters covering entertainment stories, and Rose would join him. She became the set photographer for Larry King Live, working at CNN for more than 10 years.

The first premier that Fred recalled covering was for "Lethal Weapon 3" in 1992. He got to know Alan and Alex Berlin, from the well-known celebrity photo agency Berliner Studios. They showed him the ropes. In the late 1990s Reuters provided Variety with a majority of photos for its celebrity coverage. Fred and Rose would work until 2 a.m. three to four times a week shooting premiers and then parties. Rose would take rolls of film to the lab from the premier to get processed, while Fred would stay late shooting the soirees. Variety launched its party page in 1997, and Fred's photos were a main source of material. According to Variety, Fred covered nearly 3,000 Hollywood galas and premiers from the red carpet. He was a familiar face to the many of the celebrities.

When Rose developed brain cancer, Fred was stricken with liver cancer 9 months later. While Rose battled her illness with caregivers and hospice, Fred continued to work. Fred later claimed that he would not have been able to continue working without the support of his Reuters boss, Sam Mircovich. Rose passed away in January of 2013, and Fred soldiered on. His liver cancer continued to take its toll, and work became increasingly more difficult. His last assignment was the Oscars in 2014.

Shortly before retirement Fred met a wonderful woman, Cindy Klundt. The two of them became inseparable. They traveled, dined, and enjoyed each other's company for the remainder of his life. According to Fred, he had found love again.

Fred is survived by his sons Scott and Jeff; two granddaughters Macy and Olivia Bornman, his sister Debra, brother Alan, and many nieces and nephews, as well as his loving companion Cindy Klundt.
